The grey old walls beneath the yew, With modest porch, and taper spire, Have ripened to their music too, Rung from the clamorous village choir. When wakeful men, with ears unstopped, Through weary hours have told each sound That broke upon the dark, then dropped into the pulseless silence round, While the strained eye impatient longs For the first throb of breaking light, What snatches of those heavenly songs Have come to him at dead of night! Some grand Laudates lofty roll, Some tender penitential wail, Have made a music in his soul, Sweeter than any nightingale. DAVID IN ADULLAM. Come, blessed Psalms! when mists of sin Over my soul beclouded lie, Pierce through the wild worlds strife and din, And bid the evil spirit fly. Come, blessed Psalms! when weak and lone My heart breaks down, and finds no aid, And let me find in your deep tone Some voice of comfort ready made. For who shall find, in pain or loss, Words of such sweet, sustaining power, As those that hung about the cross, And soothed my Saviours dying hour Mrs. C. F. Alexander. Id in Adullams dry and thirsty cave, Longing he cried--faint with fierce harvest heat--Oh for a draught from Bethlehems fountain sweet, I 3t Which by the gate wells out its cooling wave! Sp Bursting through hosts of foes three warriors brave Present the crystal cup--his wish complete--Which, as with life-blood crimsoned, at his...
