This has its advantage, for such sub-division of labour is the obvious and easy way of dealing with the ever-increasing mass of medical literature. Yet these composite productions, even where they gain in literary completeness, lose what is of at least equal importance, the individuality and consistency which a single writer gives to his work. In no department of medicine has the progress of science and the growth of literature been more rapid than in that which forms the subject of this treatise, and it may seem rash for an author to attempt to deal with it single-handed. Lightened as the labour is by the many complete monographs recently written on special parts, the task is still a heavy one. Time alone, if nothing...
